Writing a textbook aimed at developing new knowledge in an area in which no comprehensive book has been published previously requires years of research and really hard work. I would like to thank my past and present students from various universities and various countries, whose curiosity motivated me to relentlessly search, explore, learn, and make connections. I also would like to thank employees and managers in several companies I have provided training for. I have learned immensely from them.

My teachers, lecturers, and professors have been extremely instrumental in my professional and academic development, and career, spreading over 25 years. I particularly would like to acknowledge the influential role of my Ph.D. supervisor at Oxford Brookes University, UK, who supervised me many years ago. Her guidance still illuminates my path during my journey. May her soul rest in peace.

I also thank all researchers and authors whose publications I have read and used, and the ones who have given consent to use their scales and cultural dimension tables. I particularly thank my colleague Jim (Professor James William Neuliep, the author of the book Intercultural Communication: A Contextual Approach) from St Norbert College, for his kind and timely support, and his consent for the use of his scales. My special thanks go to the late Professor Geert Hofstede for granting permission to use country scores data for preparing cultural dimensions and the scales. I also would like to thank Professor Stella Ting-Toomey (California State University, Fullerton) for granting permission to use their scale.

Last but by no means the least, I would like to thank the editorial and production team at Routledge, Emma Travis (editor), Lydia Kessell (editorial assistant) and Claudia Austin (production editor) for their hard work, assistance, and encouragement throughout this book project.
