Rum

There's naught, no doubt, so much the spirit calms as rum and true religion.

—Lord Byron

Abilene

---

2 oz. rum
2 oz. peach nectar
3 oz. orange juice

Spills

Although the Cocomacouque recipe calls for “red wine,” you really shouldn’t use just any red wine you happen to have around. Opt for a fruit-driven, low-tannic wine like a Beaujolais (gamay grape), burgundy (pinot noir grape), Chianti (sangiovese grape), or a Rioja (tempranillo grape) crianza (which just means it’s younger and not aged as long).

Dark 'n' Stormy

---

My first encounter with a Dark 'n' Stormy was, fittingly, on a dark and stormy night in ye olde town of Marblehead, Massachusetts (right next to spooky Salem), at the home of our good friends Jeff Baker and Cynthia Roberts. Jeff, who is very particular about his cocktails, prefers to use 151 proof rum. But be forewarned—the 151 might make you feel a little extra dark and stormy the morning after.

2½ oz. dark rum
5 oz. ginger beer
1 lime wedge

Fill a Collins glass  $\frac{3}{4}$  full with ice.
Pour in dark rum and ginger beer.

Hurricane

---

My husband Dan and I are big fans of New Orleans. In fact, we've traveled there enough that we even have little rituals we must perform while there. One is making Pat O'Brien's our first stop for a hurricane, where the drink was invented. Of course, O'Brien's churns out enough of these very potent drinks now that they simply use a mix to keep up with the demand, but for this recipe (and every recipe in this book!), use fresh juices for a simply sublime sipping experience.
